Nunatsiavut Government changes position on non-essential travel

The Nunatsiavut Government is advising that, effective immediately, it will no longer be discouraging non-essential travel to, from and within the Labrador Inuit Settlement Area.

Public Health measures around COVID-19 in the province have been significantly relaxed in recent weeks, with the next changes coming into effect on March 14. At that time, while the wearing of masks will still be strongly recommended, Public Health restrictions on formal and informal gatherings, as well as measures on numbers of individuals permitted at public venues, will be lifted, and out of province travellers will no longer have to isolate and get tested.

The lifting of restrictions does not mean that COVID-19 has gone away. It will still be with us for some time to come.
